The Department of Mathematics and Statistics has a strong history of training mathematics teachers. In this presentation, we will explore the externally funded programs that have been a part of our departmental focus since 2000, including those that have been housed in the STEM Research and Learning Center. Successes and lessons learned from these experiences will be shared. Current projects, outreach efforts, and future opportunities will also be discussed.